1. I usually commute to school by motorbike because it’s the most convenient way in my city. The roads are quite narrow, and motorbikes are faster than cars in heavy traffic. It also gives me more flexibility with my schedule.

2. The biggest traffic problems in my city are traffic jams and reckless driving. During rush hours, the streets are overcrowded, making it hard to move. Also, some people don’t follow traffic rules, which causes accidents and delays.

3. The advantages of public transport are that it’s cheaper and more eco-friendly than private vehicles. It also reduces the number of cars on the road, helping to decrease traffic congestion. However, the disadvantages are that it can be crowded and slow, and in some places, buses and trains are not always on time.

4. Yes, I think the government should invest more in transportation infrastructure. For example, they could build more roads, improve public transport systems, and create better traffic management plans. This would make commuting easier and safer for everyone.

5. To reduce traffic congestion, cities can develop better public transport systems, such as buses and trains, to encourage people to use them. They can also introduce carpooling programs and build more bicycle lanes to promote eco-friendly travel. Additionally, stricter rules for parking and traffic violations can help improve road conditions.
